New methodological breakthroughs in sequencing, genomics, proteomics, bioinformatics and imaging are producing vast amounts of information. Most of the Bioinformatics research covers different disciplines including Sequence analysis, Gene annotation, Expression analysis, Classification of data through machine learning approaches etc. The fact that more than 80 per cent of pharmaceutical drugs act through proteins reflects the importance of proteins as targets for diagnosis and treatment of diseases.

Studying the functions of proteins seems to be the next important phase after the Human Genome Project. The expected outcomes from the human proteomics are firstly to identify new targets, which will act as the basis for the development of new drugs and secondly to discover new biomarkers for early diagnosis and profiling of pathologies.
