I am very pleased to witness over the years that the Journal of Clinical and Cellular Immunology is constantly gaining prestige and reputation in the scientific community as evidenced by the excellent quality of peer reviewed papers published as reviews and original scientific contributions. This is particularly special for me due to the fact that as an editorial board member I have contributed to the review process to increase the quality and visibility of the journal over the years since its creation. The outstanding scientists, clinicians and research groups publishing excellent scientific advances in several areas of Immunology in the journal are impressive. Furthermore, it is notable that the contributions from scientists and clinicians supported by extramural research grant support listed in PubMed as Free PMC Article is significantly increasing.

Moreover, the selected scholars in several areas of immunology serving on the editorial board have also contributed to the significant progress seen.

Currently, the journal is publishing exciting and cutting edge research is several areas of cellular and clinical immunology such as aspects of autoimmunity, inflammation and disease, allergy, cancer and tumor immunology, microphage biology in health and disease, immunomodulation, transplantation immunology, neuroimmunology, T cell biology, signal transduction, microbial immunity, innate and cell mediated immunity, vaccine development, among others.
Dear Delta,

Please find attached the acceptance letter indicating my willingness to continue to serve as an Editorial board member for JCCI. I also wrote a note highlighting my experience with the journal and the progress made by the journal.

Best wishes,

Fernando Villalta
