Nursing care in the body of the person with cancer

María del Pilar Sosa Rosas
Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México, México

Cancer is one of the illnesses which provoke more deaths in the population in a world level. This illness not only affects the body, (subject-object which we the nursing professionals care an which low is what we have reflected on), but also the psychology and spirit of the person. To initiate a philosophical reflection on the body of the person with cancer, involves the need to engage into the different concepts of the body so that it is comprehended from the philosophical point the view that the body is a subject which requires company during its care, from the comprehension of the functioning of that different body, result of the treatment used for its healing, because it is not easy to accompany a mutilated body due to a surgical treatment, to understand that it was a treatment to save its life, but it affects the daily activities which are the engine of the human being. Nursing is a corner Stone during the treatment of the persons with cancer, because this oncology illness process gives to the emergence of a different person but willing to continue existing, independently of the transformations of the body and its relation to the environment.

Biography

María del Pilar Sosa Rosas has completed his Ph.D. in Nursing Science, 12 years of experience in the care of the cancer patient, 30 years of experience as a nursing teacher at the National School of Nursing and Midwifery of the National Autonomous University of Mexico, associate professor in the division of professional studies, has been responsible for four research projects, she has given national and international conferences related to topic of oncology, she has written several national and international articles and is part of the portfolio of evaluators of the Mexican Council for Accreditation Nursing AC (COMACE).

soosa99@yahoo.com