Enhancing the outcome of the infection control training activities for hospitals' wellbeing

Samia Elshafie

Ministry of Health, Egypt

Infection control practices are considered as one of the main elements of hospitals' competition which enhancing the hospital competitive edging. Total healthcare coverage program would be applied all over Egypt within less than a year & patients would be the sole judges. Competing for patients / clients would be an unavoidable event. Enhancing patients 'satisfaction could be achieved only if services that contribute to "healthcare" are delivered with a suitable standard. Although infection control & patients safety programs have been applied in MOH hospitals since1997, hospital-acquired infections still among the leading causes of death. Conduction of effective & efficient training programmes could contiburte on improving the hospital well being at large.
