

The role of patient and staff experience in creating a culture of empathy and caring

Nada Siraj Massoudi

International Medical Center, Saudi Arabia

Abstract

Our pursuit for excellence in nursing care can only be complete with a truly and comprehensive holistic approach, where our actions can be shaped by our patients perceptions of the care they were provided. Their experiential input can inform us how best to plan their care and ensure that it is respectful of and In Nursing, we “know” patient demographical data to guide us on a daily basis to provide better treatments. It is “treatment” However, there are patients’ perceptions wich is diffrents. It is easy to know the patient’s vital signs, but it is not easy to know how they feel about it! We are told, as healthcare providers, to fix the bed’s railings to ensure patient’s safety from falling. However, we are not told to tuck-in the patient with a warm blanket and say (have a good night). This might be due to the fact that we can’t really distinguish between “treatment” and “care”. Suzanne Gordon, said: “true health reform depends on knowing difference between treatment and care”. In other hand, keeping the care providers at top condition is of paramount importance. In order to achieve this, there is a need for the organization to meet staff perceptions and experience who are the “deliverers” of these services. In fact, staff experience affect direct and indirect the quality of care and loyalty to a hospital. Therefore, the engagement of employees may benefit a health care organization and result in improved patient care and higher patient satisfaction. This presentation will explore the dimensions of Patient & Staff Experience and the value of patient engagement and Healthy Work Enviroiment on how it is integral to transforming organizational culture and in creating a culture of Empathy and Caring.

Biography:

Nada S. Massoudi is a BSN Registered Nurse holding a MSc in Medicine (Infection and Immunity) from Sydney University with a Postgraduate Diploma in Nursing Leadership and Management. She is the Director of Nursing Surdives at International Medical Center (IMC).

Speaker Publications:

1. “The role of patient and staff experience in creating a culture of empathy and caring”; Asian J. Ped. / 2018 / 30(8) /pp 1731-1735
2. “The role of patient and staff experience in creating a culture of empathy and caring”; Journal of nursing/ Vol 55, 2020- Issue 7
3. “The role of patient and staff experience in creating a culture of empathy and caring”; Journal of med./ Vol 281, 2019, Pages 29-38.

31st International Conference on Pediatric Nursing and Healthcare; August 17-18, 2020

Abstract Citation:

Nada Siraj Massoudi, The role of patient and staff experience in creating a culture of empathy and caring, Pediatric Nursing 2020, 31st International Conference on Pediatric Nursing and Healthcare; August 17-18, 2020 (<https://pediatric.nursingconference.com/speaker/2020/nada-siraj-massoudi-director-of-nursing-surdives-international-medical-center-saudi-arabia>)