Fostering New Advancements in Ameliorating Child Health:

Pediatrics is the branch of medicine dealing with the health and medical care of infants, children, and adolescents from birth up to the age of 18. The aims of the study of pediatrics is to reduce infant and child rate of deaths, control the spread of infectious disease, promote healthy lifestyles for a long disease-free life and help ease the problems of children and adolescents with chronic conditions. Pediatricians diagnose and treat several conditions among children including injuries, infections, genetic and congenital conditions, cancers, organ diseases and dysfunctions. Pediatrics is concerned not only about immediate management of the ill child but also long-term effects on quality of life, disability and survival. Pediatricians are involved with the prevention, early detection, and management of problems including developmental delays and disorders, behavioral problems, functional disabilities, social stresses, mental disorders including depression and anxiety disorders. Subspecialties in pediatrics include pediatric cardiology, critical care medicine, endocrinology, gastroenterology, hematology, neonatal medicine, nephrology etc.
